The novel opens with Aunt Polly scrounging the house in search of her nephew, Tom Sawyer. She finds him in the closet, discovers that his hands are covered with jam, and prepares to give him a whipping. Tom cries out theatrically, "Look behind you!" and when Aunt Polly turns, Tom escapes over the fence. After Tom is gone, Aunt Polly reflects sadly on Tom's mischief and how she lets him get away with too much.

Tom comes home at supper time very dirty and ill-humored and saucy. Dousing supper, Aunt Polly was not in a very nice humor over Tom's adventures. She had been to the barber shop, where an evil disposed barber had made her look quite as though she was a mere child. When she returned home, Aunt Polly was satisfied. Aunt Polly said, "Well, well, well. What do you think of you, Tom?"

Tom goes out of the house into the street. Typical Tom, he runs into a saloon and begins to talk to the saloon-keeper about how he knows the secrets of the world before he was twenty. Tom and the new arrival exclaim that Tom is going to be a great lawyer or a great financier. Tom knows all about the secrets of the world before he was twenty. Tom bragging, he does not care about the secrets of the world. Tom is off to the theater and eventually chases the newcomer all the way home.

When he returns home in the evening, Tom finds Aunt Polly waiting for him. She notices his dirtied clothes and resolves to make him work the next day, a Saturday, as punishment.

On Saturday morning, Aunt Polly sends Tom out to whitewash the fence. Jim passes by, and Tom tries to get him to do some of the whitewashing in return for a "white alley," a kind of ush polyline. Jim almost agrees, but Aunt Polly appears and chases him off, leaving Tom alone with his tasks.

Tom goes out to explore. He meets a boy who has just been skipped school that morning and says that his mother is still angry about it. Tom and the new arrival decide to try their luck at making an entrance to the new house.
